27.11.18 pages 236-255	In my opinion, the phrase "Slave house" suggests that Alex feels trapped. I know this because, the fact that guards have been assigned to watch him means that he is powerless against the general (S. aron) and has no freedom. Also, the fact that the fence is barbed with electrically charged wire, clearly states to the reader that even if Alex was valiant enough to take the risk to evade the guards and escape, he would die from electrication.
	What an excellent analysis of the facts and incidents in the book. Your use of language is very effective, and I can see that you are using some of

28.11.18 pages 255-294	From the behaviour, that Conrad - S. aron's assistant exhibits, I am given the impression that he is rather arrogant in nature. I know this because, after Alex asserts the fact that he left his coat in England, Conrad displays his indifference by shutting the door. This states to the reader that Conrad walks off as he believes

29.11.18	In my opinion, the author pages 294-320 has been building this suspenseful moment. Before Anthony Horowitz proceeds to close the story, he recalls Alex's past events that he has travelled to Wimbeldon; Cornwall, Miami and Skeleton Key. I am immensely intrigued as to how this story will conclude as one scenario could be a nuclear explosion that could result in rewriting a significant impact on history...

Personally, from reading this chapter as well as doing suspense stories for English, I believe that suspenseful devices adds another element of tension; this feeds into the reader being captivated because the river of suspenseful devices fuels their engagement. Linking home and school learning - fab! 😊

	my opinion, Alex Rider (the main character) is venturesome in addition to audacious. He is ready to embark on any challenge that comes his way. If you love suspenseful books, this may be the book for you as it has an enormous variety of suspenseful devices: short sentences; show not tell; empty words; onomatopoeia and more. Finished. ← Excellent! Heritage classic for next time.

Great stuff. Now how about another Conan Doyle or maybe something in the style of Dickens? There's a challenge for you!
